State and Local Housing Policies in the Trump Era

Harvard Kennedy School, Belfer Building, Bell Hall

Joseph A. Curtatone, Mayor, City of Somerville, MA

Chrystal Kornegay, Undersecretary, MA Dept. of Housing & Community Development

Henry Korman, Partner at Klein Hornig, LLP, focused on Housing and Civil Rights

Chris Herbert, Managing Director, Joint Center for Housing Studies (Moderator)

The new Trump Administration and the Republican-controlled Congress could portend significant changes in the many federal programs and policies that affect housing and community development, including future federal funding and tax incentives for housing, enforcement of fair housing laws, the future of entities like Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, and a host of others such as infrastructure and immigration. Panelists will discuss what they see as the most significant threats and possible opportunities and as well as how officials and advocates can prepare for, respond to, and possibly shape key policies and programs in the next few years.

Co-sponsored by the HKS Rappaport Institute for Greater Boston, the HKS Taubman Center for State and Local Government, HKS Students for the Alleviation of Poverty & Social Inequality (SAPSI), the HKS City + Local Professional Interest Council, the GSD Department of Urban Planning and Design, the Harvard Urban Planning Organization, the HLS Urbanists, and the MIT Department of Urban Studies and Planning.
